THE FARMER'S CORN.

At early dawn, when o'er the leaves
The frosty creeps and steals their bloom,
We trees stand stiff and bare,
Old Farmer John salutes his sheaves
Of ripened corn.

Bright jewels 'mong the stubble gleam,
And sparkle from his careless tread,
And gleamer, outwards,
But Farmer John, to a dream,
Moves through his corn.

The startled heard before him springs,
And down the furrow speeds like wind,
With eager leaps spiret spirit behind ;
The farmer, up, up, up he goes.

But Farmer John has a long way to go,
Miles and miles, to the sun-dew'd
Shore or the ocean on波浪的 wings.
Above the corn.

John quakes to think the coming rains
May sweep his corn.

Still high o'erhead the waving moon
Shows stalks of wheat in red,
And bright, gleaming, tinging rough
With Leda's wavy horn,

That yet a favoring sky at noon
Will bless the corn.

And fear creeps through his trembling veins,
As the morning sun in red,
His crimson hues adown,
The clouds are darkening down.

But the sun's face of morn
That yields the light he sees arise
To greet his corn.

Two ears of corn, two feet of sun,
The farmer's face of morn,
The clouds are darkening down.
